Cabrillo school kindergartners get valentines.

Pupils adopt younger kids, help them with valentines

By Kimberly Heinrichs

You can adopt pets, orphan dolls, stuffed doggies and now ... kindergartners?

Well, yes, but the last offer is open only to Upland's Cabrillo School fourth and fifth graders.

The adoption program is part of an effort for better communication between grade levels, said fourth/fifth grade teacher Florine Nystrom.

Once a month the fourth and fifth graders — who are taught in combination classes at the school — get together with their kindergarten buddies for activities like plays, parties and reading, she said.

Last week the older students marched to Martha Varvis' kindergarten homeroom clutching handmade valentines adorned with candy for their young friends.

They helped the kindergartners distribute their own valentines and then open them, using their superior reading skills.

"It gives the older children ... (a chance) to help someone who's younger, to teach," Nystrom said. "They really enjoy this role of being the one in charge."

One student who constantly neglects his homework will complete it if it involves his kindergarten partner, because he doesn't want to let his friend down, Nystrom said.

The older students seemed to enjoy the responsibility of the kindergartners — acting positively parental at times. Older girls led their buddies around by the hands, older boys gently guided their young counterparts by the shoulders through the crowd to hand out the cards.

"She's sick," said Jennifer Jaeger as she smoothed the hair back from her kindergarten buddy Crystal Loy's forehead. While Loy seemed to enjoy the affectionate attention, she later recovered enough to eagerly open valentines while Jaeger read off the names of the senders.

Most of the older students picked their kindergartner's names out of a hat, Nystrom said. But they were allowed to choose beforehand if they wanted. Surprisingly, two of the students selected their younger siblings as partners.

"I wanted to 'cause I like him," said Jennifer Mulhall, as she steered younger brother John through heavy classroom traffic.

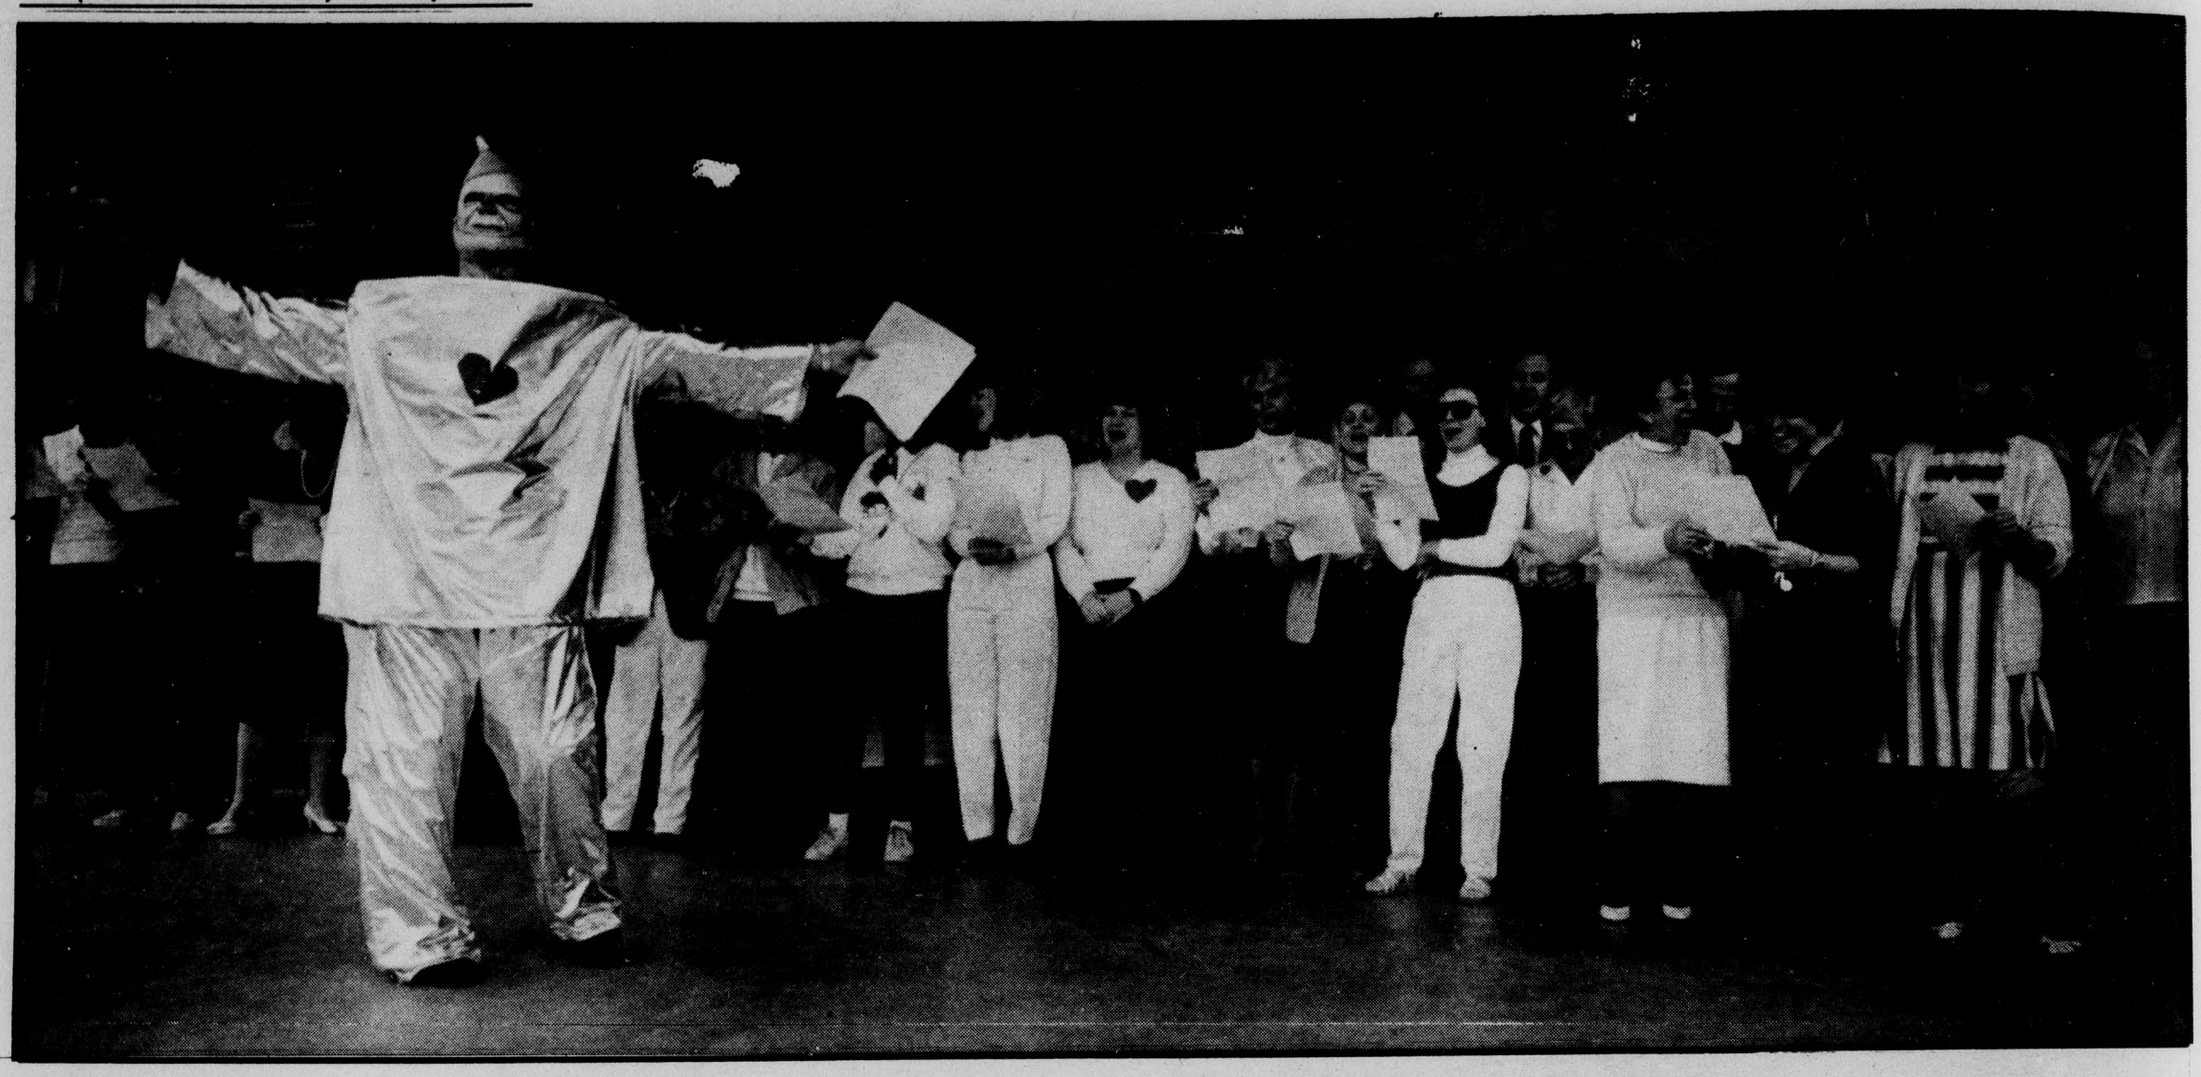

But the fourth grader admitted that sibling relations are not always so rosy at home.

"'Cause I have another sister and we all wind up fighting," she said. "It's easier at school."

Despite Brian Grimwood's dedication in choosing his sister Jennifer as his partner, the younger Grimwood was found wandering alone through the crowd.

"He must have ditched her in a hurry," kindergarten teacher Varvis joked.

But the older brother showed up and was last seen reading aloud the messages on his sister's valentines. □

The tin man, also known as Alta Loma Jr. High's Vice Principal Harry Irwin, leads school's faculty in a chorus of "You Gotta Have Heart."

'You gotta have heart' is stressed

By Mike Krapfl

Have a Heart Day at Alta Loma Jr. High School last week was a whole lot more than valentines.

Granted, the school as well as a few cheeks were decorated with bright red valentine hearts, but romance wasn't the point.

Health was.

The school's 1,200 seventh and eighth graders culminated a week of heart-health education last week by exercising their own hearts in a healthy assembly of enthusiasm.

Among those who performed before their assembled peers were the school's band, teachers, dance class and Vice Principal Harry Irwin dressed as the tin man of "Wizard of Oz" fame.

The purpose of the week and culminating assembly was to "educate the students with facts about the heart and let them have some fun," said Judy Suter, a science teacher.

Alice Evans, another science teacher and organizer of the school's second Have a Heart Day, added "we also wanted to generate some enthusiasm for Friday."

For it is on Friday that the school's students will take a few minutes from class to exercise their hearts for the Heart Association, Evans explained.

Time of year excuse nearly used up: It's time to trim

By Suzanne Sproul

Winter, or whatever the West Valley has been experiencing since December, soon will be over.

But the bulges still lingering from overindulging yourself during the holidays remain.

What better way to promote a healthy lifestyle than helping to sponsor a spring race and fun walk?, asks to Lynn Cassella, marketing communications manager at San Antonio Community Hospital in Upland.

"In the past we have normally sponsored golf tournaments, but this time the hospital wanted a different kind of fund-raiser. We decided on a race because the hospital is concerned about health and we want to be the community health connection," Cassella said.

Registration for the scheduled 5-kilometer and 10-kilometer run and 5-kilomter fun walk April 5 at 7:30 a.m. in Memorial Park in Upland is available now.

The race will be run in and around the hospital on surrounding city streets.

In addition to support from individuals, the hospital is making a 10-kilometer challenge asking West Valley businesses to compete for team trophies in three categories.

"This sounds strange, but we at the hospital really don't want to see you there. We would rather have you healthy. And if there are any proceeds left from the race, they will be used toward a cardiac catherization lab at the hospital. But we want the community to support the race because it is a healthy thing to do," Cassella said.

Chairing the event will be one of the country's premier milers, Steve Scott, an Upland High School graduate and American record holder in the mile at 3:47.69. And chairwoman of the 5-kilometer family fun walk will be actress Nedra Volz, who lives in Upland.

"We want to have a race that appeals to the serious runner as well as to families who just want to walk for the fun of it," said Jim Anderson, race director.

Numerous hospital personnel plan to participate including many SACH doctors. Joining the hospital in sponsoring the event to date are Cucamonga Printing, Inland Business magazine, Foothill Beverage Company, San Antonio Radiology Medical Group and Dr. Wallace Gosney.

The race is sanctioned by The Athletic Congress and age divisions range from 10 years old and younger to 60 years old and older.

R.C. developer makes an offer you can't refuse

By Mike Krapfl

A Rancho Cucamonga developer wants to give away a house.

Although paradoxical, The Deckk Development Co.'s offer of a free 2,000-square-foot, California-craftsman-style home, complete with stone fireplace and pine woodwork, is legitimate, according to Dougall Agan, director of development operations for Deckk.

There is, of course, a catch: the house doesn't come with the land it now occupies just southeast of the intersection of Foothill Boulevard and Carnelian Street.

So, whoever accepts Deckk's offer of the house must have a place in Rancho Cucamonga to put it and must pay an estimated $20,000 to move it there.

Why all the fuss about a sprawling, cream-colored, handyman's dream sandwiched between apartment buildings?

"Because it's a landmark," Marsha Banks, a member of the Rancho Cucamonga Historic Preservation Commission, said as she strolled through the home's dusty interior Friday.

Maxine Strane, another preservation commissioner, said the house was built in about 1911 and is one of about 24 such houses remaining in Rancho Cucamonga.

Ada Cooper, also a commissioner, said the home is historically significant because it was built by the Klusman family, the bankers and builders who helped settle Cucamonga.

Because of the home's architecture and history, the commission has considered declaring the home a landmark, Banks said.

Such a declaration — if approved by the City Council — would prohibit Deckk from destroying the home in order to build an office building the company has planned, Banks said.

"But (the commission) has a tradition of working with property owners," she said. "So we're more than willing to see the building saved by moving it."

"There's no question the house doesn't fit in here," she said while gesturing toward Foothill Boulevard's traffic and shopping centers.

Agan said his company is within three months of converting the property into an office building that will better fit the commercial character of Foothill.

"If we can't find anybody who will move the house by that time," Agan said, "it'll be destroyed."

R.C. chamber honors 5 sheriff's deputies

The Rancho Cucamonga Chamber of Commerce recently honored five San Bernardino County Sheriff's deputies and a Rancho Cucamonga resident for outstanding community service.

Those honored were:

- Beverly Webb for her contribution to crime prevention in Rancho Cucamonga. Webb volunteered more than 1,000 hours of her time last year to the sheriff's crime-prevention efforts.
- Senior Deputy Glen Pratt for his part in the arrest of eight people involved in the burglary of seven businesses last year.
- Deputy John Tomassi, who contributed to the community as the substation's school resource officer and Explorer Post coordinator.
- Duputy Hector Guerra for his role in starting the first Rancho Cucamonga Explorer Post two years ago.
- Deputy Dan Glozer, who developed map books of the city's planned communities and newer developments for use by deputies.
- Deputy Mike McRoberts for his efforts to save the life of a Rancho Cucamonga child.

Park addition due for Upland

The Upland Recreation Department is forging ahead with plans for an addition to its 5-acre Magnolia Park.

The city will be going out to bid on architectural plans for the 2-acre property west of the Magnolia Recreation Center. The new development will include 80 additional parking spaces, a playground, individual and group picnic areas and more open space.

H.O.T. Tips

(House of Tools)

It's a messy job to empty the canister of a shop vacuum. Unfortunately, a lot of dust escapes into the room. Next time you empty the vacuum, line the canister with a plastic garbage bag, fold the edges of the bag over the canister rim and clamp on the lid. When the canister is full, you simply tie the bag shut and neatly dispose of all the dust with no mess.

When edge-gluing dark colored woods, it's often difficult to hide the glue line because white and yellow glues are light in color. Next time, mix a little food coloring in the glue before application. The darkened glue line won't be as easy to spot.

Polished brass hardware will keep it's bright finish if a coat of clear lacquer is applied to the surface.

Motorists to welcome stores, traffic lanes

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Motorists will likely welcome the extra lanes as much as shoppers enjoy the new stores outlined in plans for the Seventh and Mountain Redevelopment Project in Upland.

Plans for the nearly 280,000-square-foot center on the east side of Mountain Avenue between the San Bernardino Freeway and Eighth Avenue soon may become reality.

Leases already have been signed for a Vons Pavilion market and a Home Depot store anchoring the center on either end, developer Hank Gordon said. Eight smaller stores will be sandwiched between the pair.

"It's the sales tax we're looking forward to," said City Manager Lee Travers.

The city gets 1 percent of all sales tax and Vons representatives estimate that the nearly 60,000-square-foot Pavilion store north of the freeway will sell about $15.6 million in taxable items annually, Travers said.

The city also will reap financial benefit from tax increments. It will receive the property taxes directly tied to the new construction.

A second advantage — and the reason the city declared the land a redevelopment area — is the addition of two extra lanes to heavily traveled Mountain Avenue from the freeway to the railroad tracks north of Seventh Street.

Although Mountain handles as much traffic as the six-lane Euclid Avenue, it has only four lanes, making it the most congested street in Upland during rush hours, City Engineer Fred Blanchard said.

Seventh Street will be closed between Mountain and Harrington Street, a new road that will be constructed behind the center. Harrington will curve from Seventh and run north to Eighth Street.

The Upland Planning Commission reviewed plans for the shopping center and street changes at a special meeting last Thursday, and will make a recommendation at its Feb. 26 meeting, Planning Director Jeff Bloom said. The City Council will consider the plans March 2.

City officials hope to break ground on the project in May and complete it within two years, Travers said. Already the city — through the Redevelopment Agency — has purchased the land the Department of Motor Vehicles occupied along Eighth Street and the land once occupied by Ole's Home Store on Seventh Street.

Until the DMV moves its offices, it is paying the city $5,439 monthly rent, Finance Director Phyllis Proctor said.

Richard Riemer, the city's condemnation attorney, was instructed last week to begin condemnation procedures against the owners of the property occupied by the Chevron and Texaco stations, Travers said.

After a development agreement is signed by Hank Gordon of the Seventh and Mountain Limited Partnership, which owns 17 acres of the project, the partnership will buy the land from the city, Travers said.

Upland to add $125,000 hospital fees

Upland will add $125,000 in fees from San Antonio Community Hospital to its police station building fund.

The city charged the fee in exchange for issuing discount bonds for the hospital, despite the institution's request for a waiver. By having the city lend its name to the $40-million bonds for hospital improvements, the institution got a better interest rate.

"The council felt it was a good use to put the fee to because it will serve the hospital too," City Manager Lee Travers said.

The hospital fee will be added to the $5 million the city sold in bonds for the building of the new $4.8-million police station. Construction of the facility in the 1400 block of West 13th Street is expected to start in May, Travers said.

Father, firefighter come to the rescue

By Lori Moody

If only Harry Houdini had been around when 6-year-old Michael Nielson got trapped inside a roll-top desk Friday morning.

Instead the boy relied on his dad and firefighters to free him after spending 20 minutes in the dark, cramped confines of the oak desk.

"I don't know how he got there," said Capt. Mike Ploung of the Foothill Fire Protection District. "The top shut on him. The key was inside."

Rod Nielson, the father of Michael and four other children, jokingly admitted that his son is "always getting into mischief."

Michael, a first-grader, was playing with his 4-year-old brother David in the family room when he climbed up into the desk, Nielsen said. The top slid down and automatically locked.

"He (Michael) had the key," said Nielson who was leaving for work at the time. "He (David) hollered. My wife (Suzanne) was panicked."

By the time firefighters arrived to the family's home in the 8300 block of Orchard Street, the boy's father had taken a drawer out of the desk and was squeezing the locking mechanism off with pliers. Eventually firefighters were able to force open the desk top.

Nielson said his son, who is about 3½ feet tall, was able to lay down in the desk.

And when he was free, "he rolled out and came out like a sardine," according to the fire captain.

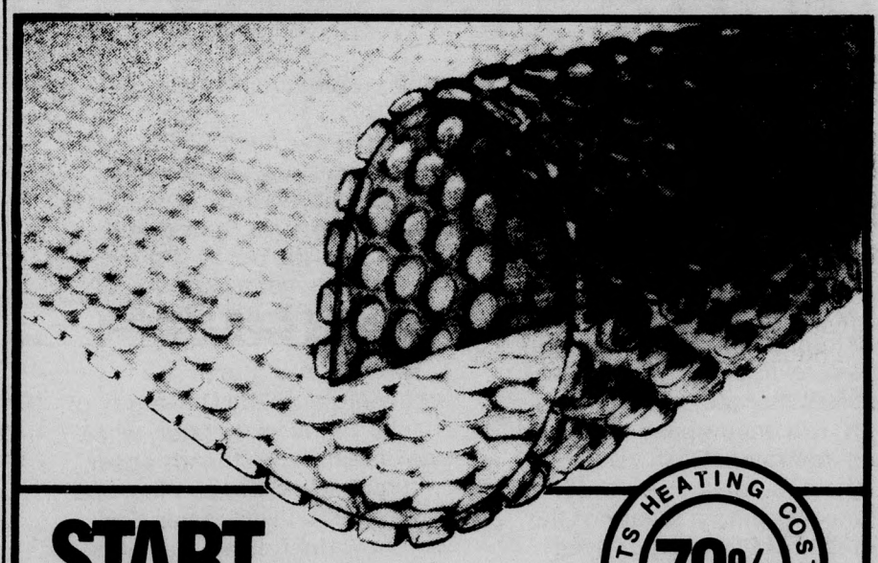

The boy was crying, but came through unharmed, "I guess the kid was pretty petrified being in there," Ploung said.

Ukrainian egg folklore finds its way to U.S.

By Suzanne Sproul

Among Ukrainians throughout the world there is a belief that the fate of the world depends upon Pysanky. As long as egg-decorating is allowed to continue, the world will exist.

According to Ukrainian folklore, should the custom cease, evil, in the guise of an ancient monster chained to a cliff, will encompass the world and destroy it. Each year the monster's servants encircle the globe, keeping a record of the number of Pysanky, or dyed eggs, made. When there are few, the monster's chains loosen and evil flows through the world. When there are many, the monster's chains hold tight, allowing love to conquer evil.

Cathy Handlin is determined not to let the exiled folk art form of "egg writing" from the Soviet Union die. Handlin is teaching a one-day Saturday workshop on the ancient art form Feb. 28 at Chaffey College.

The form involves the use of common eggs, beeswax, dyes and a kistka, a small stylus used to imprint wax designs on the eggs. The form involves 12 different egg divisions and each of the plant, animal or geometic motiffs used on the eggs has a story to tell.

For example, stalks of wheat, the mainstay of the Ukrainian people for centuries, represent prosperity and sometimes Holy Communion; storks, hens, roosters, chicks and sparrows reflect joy, fertility and the fulfillment of wishes; circles represent the most powerful symbol of protection; and crosses symbolize Christ's suffering, death and his resurrection.

"I first saw my first Pysanka when I was 10 years old at a Laguna Art Festival. I thought it was made with a Spirograph buteach of the designs are done by hand. I never forgot them," said Handlin in her parents Ontario home.

Handlin was teaching archaeology at the University of Alaska, many years later, when she encountered the art again.

"I took the class and learned how to do it. I was fascinated with how the folk art was closely related to anthropology. Pysanky (more than one egg) are beautiful and I love showing others how to do them.

"Pysanky no longer are allowed in the Soviet Union. You can only buy Pysanka in Soviet bloc countries with foreign currency. I have been told that the Soviets don't want them around because they don't want the Ukranians linked to tradition," Handlin said.

The art form, passed from generation to generation, has existed for at least 1,000 years, she said.

"Many Ukranian women begin making the Pysanka before Easter. They would pray before working on them and then the priest would bless them. It is known as the blessing of the basket.

"Pysanka are symbols of good will and love and are given to people throughout the year at various momentous occasions. Eggs are a symbol of life and are an intimate part of their religious heritage," she said.

Two art forms exist in the world, Handlin said. Fine arts involving painting and sculpture are done by people born with talents or ones who acquire them. But folk art, like Pysanka, is done by simple people without any art background.

The mechanics of the art form are more important than art talent, according to Handlin.

No prior art background is needed. Handlin said any one of her students will have a completed work at the end of the day-long workshop.

"With Pysanka, you can see your own progress and beauty right off the bat. There is a method to holding the kistka and putting the designs on but I can teach you the tricks. Pysanka is like batik using wax and dye," she said.

A design can be penciled onto a egg. Using a kistka and melted wax, the artist then retraces the design. The egg then is dyed. The process is repeated and finally the wax is melted and rubbed off, leaving the intricate designs. The egg is allowed to dry, the yolk blown out and then varnished.

"The going rate for Pysanka in Los Angeles is between $17 and $35 each. I have never sold one of my Pysanka. They mean too much to me. They are to be used for gifts.

"It is a very nice tradition. If it wasn't for Ukrainians who migrated to the free world, the art would be lost. I feel like I am helping to perpetuate what might have died out," she said.

Free phone service to Ontario expected

By Mike Krapfl

Etiwandans should have free, local phone service to Ontario by this time next year, General Telephone's district manager said recently.

Suzanne Budovec said the restoration of local Ontario/Etiwanda service is part of the company's rate case now being reviewed by the Public Utilities Commission in San Francisco.

If the case is approved by the beginning of next year as expected, Budovec said free service to Ontario from Etiwanda should be possible shortly thereafter.

Rancho Cucamonga City Council member Deborah Brown called the news "a miracle."

Brown, an Etiwanda resident who has fought the per-minute charges to Ontario that Etiwandans have paid since June, said she had been told as recently as last month a resolution was 18 months to two years away.

When she heard that, she said "I hit the roof."

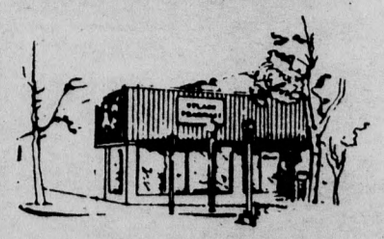

That done, she said she and Mark Lorimar, Rancho Cucamonga's administrative analyst, asked county Supervisor Jon Mikels and state Sens. Ruben Ayala and H.L. Richardson to push for the restoration of free service.

So far, she said, only Mikels has responded with a letter advocating the free service.

Etiwandans have been fighting for free Ontario service because many essential calls — a call to the phone company for example — are charged by the minute.

Under the proposed resolution, Etiwanda's rate point — the point from which zone usage measurement (ZUM) is made — will be moved to allow local service to Ontario.

Alta Loman faces fines for cutting down trees

By Mike Krapfl

An Alta Loma landowner could be fined as much as $1,000 for each of an estimated 100 eucalyptus trees he cut down on his property without a permit two weeks ago, Rancho Cucamonga's city planner said last week.

The planner, Brad Buller, added, however, that city officials have yet to decide how much they will fine Phil Holcomb, or even if he will be fined for violating the city's tree ordinance.

The ordinance protects the city's eucalyptus trees from being cut or destroyed while the young city develops.

Although Rancho Cucamonga has yet to take action against Holcomb, Buller said, "The city is very serious about this violation and we are going to do whatever we can to take whatever legal action we deem necessary."

David Goodrich, supervisor of the District Attorney's office in Ontario, said Buller had tried to contact him about Holcomb's tree-cutting, but the two had yet to meet or decide on a course of action.

"That's extremely unfair," Leilani Holcomb said in reaction to the possible fines she and her husband could face.

"I believe my husband has only taken down the (trees) that needed to be taken down for us to build our dream house," she said.

The house the Holcombs want to build is in The Woods tract of northern Alta Loma.

To protect the tract's woodsy atmosphere, the Rancho Cucamonga Planning Commission has required all home builders to preserve as many trees as possible.

Scott Murphy, an assistant planner for the city, said the Holcombs had twice been told that their plans to develop the property would destroy too many trees.

Mrs. Holcomb said the city's objections to their plans for the home were "unreasonable."

"We're not building a purple monstrosity up there," Mrs. Holcomb said. "We're building a very nice two-story home with landscaping that will include a lot of trees."

Mrs. Holcomb said, "I can see why the city wants to protect the trees up there, but I don't think they can see our side. We're working with them, but they're not working with us."

She said she had applied for a permit to cut the trees, and was told two weeks ago a permit "was in the mail."

Murphy said Mrs. Holcomb had applied for a permit, but had never been given nor promised one because the development plans she submitted weren't consistent with the area's tree-preservation policy.

Blood shortage no problem to hospitals

By Mike Krapfl

West Valley hospitals have not been affected by a countywide blood shortage that has delayed surgery at one nearby hospital, officials said last week.

Laboratory supervisors at the county Medical Center in San Bernardino, Doctors' Hospital of Montclair, Kaiser Permanente Medical Center in Fontana, Ontario Community Hospital and San Antonio Community Hospital in Upland said blood supplies are tight, but not critical.

The tight supplies delayed some surgery last week at Loma Linda University Medical Center, the Blood Bank of San Bernardino and Riverside Counties' biggest user, a blood bank spokesman said.

Even though the shortage has yet to be felt in the West Valley, the blood bank needs donors, said Paul Sautter.

The blood bank's current shortage, however, isn't because of a lack of donors, he said. It's because of increased usage.

"We've had more donors than ever," Sautter said. "But we've also had a 15 percent increase in use over last January."

West Valley hospitals, for example, typically use 1,000 pints of blood in a month. Ontario's Blood Donor Center, however, draws only 550 pints in a month, he said.

In addition to the West Valley's growth in population and traffic, the "AIDS scare" has kept potential donors away, said Jill Donahue, director of marketing at Doctors' Hospital.

Board decides portion of plant to reopening

By Kimberly Heinrichs

A portion of a Fontana sewage treatment plant will be reopened, the Santa Ana Regional Water Quality Control Board decided last week.

The Chino Basin Municipal Water District got the go-ahead to open a solid separation plant and sewage pond at a second hearing on the subject in San Bernardino.

Although Fontana residents and officials showed up in force at an earlier meeting in September to protest the plant, according to CBMWD General Manager Theo Nowak, there were no city representatives present at last week's meeting.

The board originally denied permission to re-open the plant on Jurupa Avenue, just east of Live Oak Avenue in South Fontana. However, after CBMWD filed an appeal, the board decided to schedule a second hearing.

"One of the big breakthroughs since September is the monitoring plan," said board member Jim Bennett.

Nowak said he did not consider the plan to monitor nearby wells for toxics necessary, but it made the sewage plant request more palatable, he said. The tests will also fill a void in the lack of information about the effect of sewage plants on water supply, he said.

Since CBMWD does not have any wells nearby, the district and the water board will agree on appropriate wells later, he said.

The plant will partially treat about 2 million gallons of sewage a day, Nowak said. It will relieve the pipelines carrying sewage from Fontana to the main treatment plant in Ontario, he said. The plant will remove solids from the sewage and it will pump excess sewage to a one-acre pond. That sewage will be pumped back into the pipelines during less-busy periods, he said.

The only objection to the reopening at last week's hearing came from the Jurupa Community Services District, which has wells south of the plant. The district opposed letting the sewage sit in a pond without protective lining, engineer Sam Gerson said. Some of it might seep into the groundwater that runs to the district's wells, he said.

But CBMWD will be required to line its ponds in 1990 and the monitoring will keep track of the pond in the meantime, making lining unnecessary at this point, the board concluded.

The plant was closed a year ago in order to receive federal funds for another pipeline, he said. Although the CBMWD eventually hopes to reopen the entire plant, only the treatment facilities and one pond will be opened now, he said.

Labor camp residents must move for progress

By Mike Krapfl

Like the groves and vineyards they helped harvest, residents of the West Valley's migrant labor camp are losing ground to urban development.

The residents, some of whom said they had lived in the camp for more than 20 years, have been served notice to vacate what used to be the San Gabriel Valley Labor Association camp within 60 days, according to the property's new owner.

Edward Halvajian of Newport Beach said he plans to level the camp and build homes when the residents have left the dusty barracks on his land north of Arrow Highway near the Cucamonga Wash.

When asked if he would help relocate the families now living in the camp, Halvajian said, "We're certainly not throwing them out in the street homeless.

"Those who are current on their rent," he said, "are getting 60 days rent-free to find a new home."

Those who haven't kept up to date on their rent payments, he said, have been notified they must do so or vacate the property.

Halvajian said he didn't know how many of the camp's 18 households had kept pace with their rent payments, but did say "not very many are current."

Residents inside the camp last week confirmed they had been given notice but said they were hardly happy about being asked to move.

"I feel bad about moving. I don't want to get out; I want to stay here." said Elvira Valencei, who added she has lived in the camp more than 20 years.

Valencei, who was talking with some of her neighbors near one of the camp's gravel roads, said she'll move "before they kick me out," but wasn't sure where.

"Maybe I'll go to El Monte," she said. "I've got a brother there."

Eusebeuo Jiminez said he was "more than mad" about being asked to leave the camp after 13 years of living there.

Jiminez said he was mad not only because he didn't know where he'd move, but also because "the old owners left here without even saying goodbye."

The former owners — the San Gabriel Valley Labor Association — sold the camp late last year because "there's just no more citrus left and no more need for these workers," the association's president of the board, F.W. Dundas, said at the time.

Dundas also said one of the reasons the camp had remained open despite the area's dwindling agricultural base was because of the problem of relocating the residents.

Although neither the camp's former or current owners are working to solve that problem, the county might be able to help, according to the assistant director of the county Housing Authority.

W.A. McCullough said his agency would "certainly make every effort to help relocate" the camp's residents.

Time to sign up for softball leagues

While the boys of summer are beginning their spring training in Florida and Arizona, Rancho Cucamonga residents can start flexing their limbs for the city's Adult Softball League.

The games start in April and the league still has openings for both the mens' and the coed league.

For registration information, call the city's Community Services Department at 980-2634.

Assisted-housing list taking applications

By Kimberly Heinrichs

The Upland Housing Authority is taking applications through Feb. 27 for its waiting list for federally assisted housing.

Those who feel they qualify for the program will be allowed to sign up from 10 to 11:30 a.m.

The authority recently received approval for 75 more housing units under the Department of Housing and Urban Development's Section 8 assistance program, Executive Director Xenia Szabo said.

For those outside Upland, the county housing authority is waiting for final approval of subsidies for 10 units under the voucher program and hopes to get 75 Section 8 housing certificates in the next two months, reported John McGrath, county authority finance director.

In Upland, 50 of the homes will be under the certificate program and 25 will be vouchers. Although most of the new housing will be filled by families already on the authority's waiting list, Szabo said the new allotments will allow more people to sign up.

With 186 names on the waiting list, the authority temporarily stopped taking applications, she said, but it still received numerous calls for housing help.

"We get eight to 10 calls a day now," Szabo said. "I don't know why, but the calls have been constant lately."

Under the conditions of the 50 certificates, tenants are restricted to apartments at or below a set rental rate, she said. Tenants with the certificates pay 30 percent of their gross income on rent and the federal government picks up the rest.

The Upland authority, which currently has 403 certificates, now will be issuing 16 certificates for one and two-bedroom homes for senior citizens and 34 certificates for one and two-bedroom family units, Szabo said.

But it is a new program called housing vouchers that will make a difference for larger families. For years the authority has been unable to help larger families needing three and four-bedroom homes because the rents were just too high in the city, she said.

The government's set rate of $595 for three-bedroom units and $670 for four-bedroom homes was impossible to meet in Upland, she said. So she got HUD approval to issue certificates for three-bedroom homes up to $714 and four-bedrooms up to $804, but families still had no luck, she said.

"We issued (the certificates) and the families shopped and shopped and still couldn't find anything," Szabo said.

Finally the authority just transferred the certificates to one and two-bedroom units and the names of the large families who didn't qualify simply sat on the waiting list.

But the authority's 25 new vouchers could change the situation for the 21 families still waiting for homes with more bedrooms and additional families not on the list because it does not specify a certain rent level.
